Prosecutor drops preliminary investigation against Studsvik

The prosecutor has decided to drop the preliminary investigation concerning suspicions that Studsvik was in violation of the Radiation Protection Act and the Act on Transportation of Hazardous Goods in connection with a shipment of radioactive iridium.

The prosecutor notes in his decision that it cannot be shown that any individual within the company can be charged with such negligence that a crime existed and that the preliminary investigation is therefore being discontinued.

Background

A shipment from Studsvik containing radioactive iridium was found to have an abnormally high radiation level when measurements were taken on receipt in New Orleans, USA. The preparation, iridium-192, was intended for industrial use. The preparation was sent from Studsvik on 27 December 2001. The Swedish Radiation Protection Authority, SSI, was of the opinion that Studsvik had contravened the Radiation Protection Act and the Act on Transportation of Hazardous Goods. SSI considered that the crime was not negligible and reported the company to the office of the public prosecutor in Nyköping.
